The Star and Herald 2700
Extract Of Speech By Japan's Foreign Minister In The Diet

The Imperial Japanese Consulate submits the following extract from an address delivered by Baron Tanaka, the Foreign Minister of the Imperial Government of Japan, before the session of the Japanese Diet (Parliament) on January 22 of this year.

It must be gratifying to you as it is to me, to observe that the friendship between this Empire and the Treaty Powers is growing steadily in cordiality and that this Empire is making in full measure its contribution to the peace of the world, the foundations of which are being strengthened year by year.

As an instrument of world peace, the importance of the treaty that was signed at Paris on August 27 last, can hardly be overestimated. Considering the important character of the matter, the Government deemed it fit to despatch a plenipotentiary to Paris for the signing of the treaty, and appointed Count Uchida for that purpose.

In the matter of our friendly intercourse with individual nations, the Government have since I last had the honour to speak before this House, concluded a commercial treaty and a commercial agreement, respectively, with Germany, New Zealand and Latvia, and the fishery convention with Russia was also ratified last year. It is a source for congratulation that the bond of friendship, economic and political with the United States is being more than ever strengthened. Only I wish to add that the matter of immigration law which has been pending for the past few years, has not yet been composed. A satisfactory solution of a problem I am fully confident, is growing year after year.

Turning now to the situation in China, it is highly gratifying for this Empire, which always has at heart the welfare of the Chinese people, to note that the strife and warfare which have been prevalent in China more than fifteen long years are gradually subsiding and everything now appears to point to peace.

This Government sincerely desires that the Chinese nation availing itself of this happy tendency in its affairs may speedily accomplish its great enterprise of peaceful unification. Deeply sympathizing as they do with the Chinese people, this Government is quite willing, in cooperation with other nations having close relations with China, to lend them, as assistance as far as possible in their task of reconstruction. It used hardly be pointed out that the path of China, both at home and abroad, is being beset with difficulties and the Chinese Government in order to attain their aims should more than ever be guided by the counsel of self-restraint and moderation.

In speaking of our relationship with China, I feel bound to say a few words about our position in Manchuria as distinguished from the rest of China. In view of the political and strategic importance which it bears to Japan on account of its geographic contiguity to our territory, and considering the historic significance which it possesses in that region restored to China by Japan at the risk of her national existence from the aggressive grip of the Czarist Russia, it is quite natural that this sentiment of the Japanese people toward Manchuria should be peculiarly keen and entirely different from that toward any other part of China. Further more, more than one million

Japanese subjects reside in that region today and Japan has many important rights and interests there. The interest and concern with which Japanese people have come to regard the affairs of Manchuria should therefore not cause the least wonder. It goes without saying that the Japanese Government will respect the sovereignty of China over Manchuria and will do all in their power for the preservation of the principles of the open door and equal opportunity, and desire that the region be made a safe abode for both natives and foreigners. They are at the same time fully determined to take appropriate steps should a state of affairs arise in Manchuria which would disturb the local tranquility and thus put their vital interests in jeopardy. This Government have always followed this policy in all their dealings with Manchuria.

In a word, what this Government desire in regard to China is that the two nations, mutually understanding the position of the other, should be animated by a spirit of conciliation in their exchange of views and in their efforts for the settlement of various questions pending between them, so that a relationship may be restored between them that will really not only contribute to their mutual well-being, but will be conducive to the tranquility of the Far East and eventually to the progress of world civilization.

I believe that I have sufficiently made clear the foreign policy of this Government in this regard. At which they expect to strengthen our friendly relations with China, and to protect fully our rights and interests and to contribute to the consolidation of world peace.

TANAKA RESENTS QUERY AS TO CHANG

Japanese Premier Tried to Avoid Question.

TOKIO, Jan. 22 (A. P.).—Despite pleas by Premier Tanaka to opposition leaders not to mention the subject, the unlaid ghost of Chang Tso-lin, once ruler of northern China, stalked through the Japanese Diet this afternoon.

Ryutaro Nagai, a member of the Minseitō (opposition) party, led off the interpellators by asking the Premier why the Government had not cleared up the mystery of Chang's death, which reflected unfavorably toward Japan.

"Abroad there are rumors concerning the bombing of Chang Tso-lin which should be allayed," said Nagai. "The Government claims the matter is under investigation, but the investigation should have finished long ago."

Baron Tanaka's reply was blunt. He said the Government was still investigating.

Marshal Chang, one-time head of the Northern Chinese Government, died from injuries received when the special train in which he fled from Peking to Mukden last June was blown up in Manchuria. It had been understood that the Government would be assailed by the opposition for failure to clear up the mystery of Chang's death, it being claimed that as long as the facts are now known a cloud rests on Japan's international reputation.

Speaking in the Diet, Finance Minister Mitsuichi observed that the economic condition of Japan was steadily recovering from the effects of the financial panic of last April and that the readjustment banks are making satisfactory progress.

He concluded by stating that the Government was doing its best to stabilize the exchange, for which reason it wished to raise the gold embargo as soon as possible.

TOMIO DENIES AIDING YANG.

Takes Exception to Reports of Anti-Manchurian Connivance.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Jan. 29.—The Japanese Foreign Office denied in toto today reports emanating from the Chinese garrison at Peking that Japan had conspired with Yang Yu-ting, who was recently summarily executed by Chang Hsueh-liang, the Governor of Manchuria, in plans to establish an independent republic of Manchuria.

Members of both Houses of Parliament continue to press for publication of official reports on Chang Tso-lin's death, but Baron Tanaka, the Prime Minister, continues to refuse.

"It is almost universally believed here that some Japanese of the 'Ronin' [outcast], or hyper-patriotic type, were involved with some Chinese in the crime, and there is scarcely any public man outside the Cabinet and War Office who fails to condemn the official secrecy. An investigation, the results of which Premier Tanaka awaits, has been proceeding since October and seems as far as ever from finality.

A hypothesis that some members of the Japanese Army were implicated, of which there is no evidence, has been suggested as the explanation of the Prime Minister's obstinate silence, which is exposing him to damaging political attacks.

TOKIO REFUSES CHANG DOCUMENTS

Opposition Fails to Force Government's Hand.

TOKIO, Jan. 31 (A. P.).—An unsuccessful attempt to compel the Government to publish the results of its investigation into the bombing of Chang Tso-lin's special train outside of Mukden last year, today brought to an end the warmest debate which has yet been held on this question in the House of Representatives.

The Minseitō, or opposition party, introduced a resolution demanding that the Government reveal all its available information regarding Chang's death, but the resolution was defeated, 220 to 193, the Seiyūkai, or Government party, closing its ranks solidly.

The resolution followed a speech by Joichi Camada, member of the Minseitō party, who charged the Government with gross negligence because of failure to investigate the case fully while the evidence was fresh. He also declared that the Government, in view of its pronouncement of May 18 last year promising the maintenance of peace and order in Manchuria, must accept responsibility for Chang Tso-lin's death.

Kanichiro Kamel, proletarian, alleged that the Government had received a Mukden report implicating Japanese ronin (irresponsible adventurers) in the bombing.

Premier Tanaka denied the existence of such a report. Kamel then asked if it would be disadvantageous to Japan to publish the report drawn up by Goro Uchida, Japanese Consul at Mukden.

Kaku Mori, Parliamentary Secretary for Foreign Affairs, replied that it would be disadvantageous in view of the existing circumstances.

TANAKA IS ATTACKED ON CHINESE POLICY

Opposition Declares His Old Attitude to Nanking Roused Anti-Japanese Sentiment.

SHANTUNG MOVE SCORED

Prime Minister Attributes Altered Manner as Due to Ever Changing Situation in China.

Feb. 3. Times
Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Feb. 2.—The first round of the Opposition's attack on the government reached a climax today when Reijiro Wakatsuki and Kijuro Shidehara submitted the whole of Premier Tanaka's performance and policy to destructive criticism. No resolutions were proposed, as the Opposition leaders purpose is not to force a vote but to present to the public an indictment of the government's policies.

Before starting its main attack the Opposition had cleared away the question of Chang Tso-lin's death by moving a resolution demanding the publication of the facts, a resolution which the government defeated by a margin of twenty-two votes. The explanation suggested by the government supporters for the abandonment of the question, which gave ample scope for baiting Baron Tanaka, was that the Opposition leaders knew the allegations of Japanese complicity did not affect the government and could not be pressed to an issue. Anyhow it did not figure in the Opposition's main attack.

M. Wakatsuki scored a debating triumph over Premier Tanaka, whose oratory is of the soldierly kind, but he introduced no new factors.

M. Shidehara's attack on the new foreign policy of the government, which, he said implied that China's policy was growing more formidable, gave great encouragement to the government's opponents. He repeated the charge that Baron Tanaka's positive policy had produced nothing but anti-Japanese agitations. The dispatch of troops to Shantung had failed to protect Japanese lives, and had embittered Chinese feeling against Japan. The famous advice to Mukden against union with Nanking, Mr. Shidehara declared, had not prevented unification. The Premier's efforts to obtain British cooperation disclosed the failure of his own. Mr. Shidehara demanded the publication of the documents exchanged with London on this matter. Finally he drew an effective picture of Japan lagging behind the rest of the world on the tariff question.

Premier Tanaka put up his customary stonewall defense. His policy had altered, he admitted, but it was because the Chinese situation was always changing. He declared no documents had been exchanged regarding Anglo-Japanese cooperation, Baron Uchida's conversation in London having been intended merely to explain Japan's position and to correct the British impression that Japan was indifferent when British interests were suffering a few years ago.

The Prime Minister's speech had obviously been prepared with a view to reaching a wider and more influential circle than that which heard it. It was apparently intended to present to the country at large a contrast between the liberal policy which Shidehara consistently advocated and Baron Tanaka's policy. The two are expected later in an exchange of influential opinion regarding the best method of dealing with China.

余於去年一月。以外相資格。在議會報告我國對外關係以來。瞬經一年。茲將一年來外交問題之經過報告。我國與締盟各國之國交。日益親善。世界和平之基礎。又日臻鞏固。而我國對此已有充分之貢獻者。誠屬慶賀。以世界和平而論。去年八月廿七日在巴黎簽押廢除戰爭條約。該約乃一重要之協定。我國因以該約性質之重要。特派內田伯爵為全權委員赴巴黎簽約。復觀我國與列強之國交關係。其與德國英領紐西倫及羅特維爾等國。則從新訂立通商條約或協定。又日俄兩國間之漁業新協約。亦經批准成立。其他與北美合眾國之經濟的關係。現方日益親密。國交日臻親善。無任欣慰。惟數年以來成為懸案之所謂排日移民法。迄今尚未解決。其解決之道。惟俟日美兩國國民互相諒解。可信此項諒解當必與日俱增。其次細觀中國之狀況。十五年來之戰亂。現經平息。漸呈和平之氣象。恆以鄰邦之慶福為懷之我國。深為欣慰。政府深望中國國民善用此種氣象。早日完成和平統一及建設事業。日本對此始終深表同情。又擬協同與中國關係甚多之各國有所貢獻。惟國民政府之前途。內外均有幾許之難關。故為到達所期之目的計。中國政府更須以自重及穩健之態度臨事者。固無俟言。滿洲乃接壤我國。故於國防上政治上。有重大之關係。我國對於俄國之侵畧。曾不惜以國運為孤注。而恢復該地方之自由。既有此種歷史關係。故我國國民對該處之國民的感情。當異於對中國其他之

760 地方。况該處現有百餘萬之日本臣民居住。及有重要之權利利益甚多。因此日本國民對於滿洲之事情。當然有深刻之注意。日政府固切望尊重在滿洲之中國領土主權。及維持開放門戶機會均等之趣旨。而使其為內外國人安居之地。故該處凡有擾亂安謐或損害我國重大之權利利益之事件發生。有排除之決心。日政府向來根挾此項方針。措置一切。要之日政府之所希望者。中日兩國互相諒解其所處地位。並根挾其諒解以相讓妥協之精神。坦懷交換意見。而解決以前一切之懸案。進而協謀中日兩國國民之共榮。維持遠東之和平。及貢獻於世界文化之進展。依上述概略之說明。對於日政府外交方針之大要。可信當已明白。日政府今後仍以此方針。增進與各國之友誼關係。擁護及伸張日本之權利利益。同時貢獻於世界人類之和平焉。

BARON GENERAL TANAKA, in the capacity of Minister for Foreign Affairs, he is Premier as well, spoke in the House of Peers on January 22 on the policy of Japan in China in a manner intended to allay universal suspicion of diplomatic methods but which is not likely to achieve the object. He expressed the gratification of the Empire "which always has at heart the welfare of the Chinese people" to note that the warfare and the strife which have been prevalent in China for more than fifteen long years, are gradually subsiding and everything appears to point to peace. The various efforts of the Japanese Government in recent years to disrupt and dismember China from the Nishibara loans and the presentation of the Twenty One Demands to the interference with Chinese Sovereignty in Manchuria and Shantung, do not convince us that Japan has ever had the welfare of the Chinese nation at heart. We are surprised that after preventing the flying of the Nationalist flag in Manchuria and after causing the slaughter of Chinese in Shantung by the Japanese in their effort to halt the Nationalist advance to Peking, Baron-General Tanaka, exponent of positive policies, champion of international co-operation, for the suppression of Chinese Nationalism, a sabre-rattler, could have the audacity to talk of Japan's anxiety for the welfare of the Chinese people.

Having paved the way through paid propagandists with the assurance that Japan respects the Sovereignty of China in Manchuria, the Japanese Premier-cum-Minister for Foreign Affairs would have us believe that Japan welcomes one and all to trade and invest to the utmost limit in the Three Eastern Provinces. At the same time he affirms that Japan is fully determined to take appropriate steps when a state of affairs arises in Manchuria which disturbs those principles (of equal opportunities) or places them in jeopardy. Again we would like to point out that the actions of Japan in recent years in regard to Manchuria belie the assurances of the Tokyo Government that it upholds at all times equal opportunities for all in Manchuria. Judging from such actions it would seem that Japan's idea in respect of "equality" is everything for herself and nothing for the rest!

We are as anxious for goodwill and mutual understanding between Japan and China as Baron-General Tanaka professes himself to be, but so long as the Japanese do not stop from running away with the idea that the Chinese could for ever be treated as an underdog, there will be no such goodwill and mutual understanding.

JAPAN'S POLICY.

OPENING SESSION OF IMPERIAL DIET.

BARON TANAKA SPEAKS ON CHINA. MANCHURIA.

According to advices from Tokyo, Premier Tanaka made a speech in his capacity of Minister for Foreign Affairs, yesterday, at the opening session of the Imperial Diet, on the foreign policy of Japan.

After speaking of the cordial relationship existing between Japan and foreign powers, he spoke on Japan's policy toward China as follows:

Turning now to the situation in China, it is highly gratifying for this Empire, which always has at heart the welfare of the Chinese people, to note that the strife and warfare which have been prevalent in China for more than fifteen long years are gradually subsiding and everything appears to point to peace. This Government is sincerely desirous that the Chinese nation, availing itself of this happy tendency in its affairs, may speedily be enabled to accomplish its great enterprise of peaceful unification.

Deeply sympathizing as they do with the Chinese people, this Government is quite willing, in co-operation with other nations having close relations with China, to lend them assistance as far as possible in their task of reconstruction. It need hardly be pointed out that the path of China both at home and abroad is beset with difficulties, and the Chinese Government, in order to attain their aims, should more than ever be guided by counsel of self-restraint and moderation.

Position in Manchuria.

"In speaking of our relationship with China, I feel bound to say a few words about our position in Manchuria as distinguished from the rest of China. In view of the political and strategic importance which it bears to Japan on account of the geographic contiguity with our territory and considering the historic significance which it possesses in that the region was restored to China by Japan at risk of her national existence from the aggressive grip of Tsarist Russia, it is quite natural that the sentiment of Japanese people toward Manchuria should be peculiarly keen and entirely different from that toward any other part of China. Furthermore, more than a million Japanese subjects reside in that region to-day and Japan has many important rights and interests there. The interest and concern with which the Japanese people have come to regard the affairs of Manchuria should, therefore, not cause the least wonder.

The Open Door.

"It goes without saying that the Japanese Government will respect sovereignty of China over Manchuria, do all in its power for the preservation of the principles of the open door and equal opportunity, and desire that the region be made a safe abode for both natives and foreigners. They are, at the same time, fully determined to take appropriate steps whenever a state of affairs arises in Manchuria which is likely to disturb the peace. This Government has always followed this policy in all their dealings with Manchuria. In a word, the two nations, mutually understanding the position of the other, should be animated by a spirit of conciliation in their exchange of views and in their efforts for settlement of various questions pending between them, so that the relationship may be restored between them that will really not only contribute to their mutual well being but will be conducive to the tranquillity of the Far East and eventually to the progress of the world civilization.

"I believe that I have sufficiently made clear the foreign policies of this Government, in pursuance of which they expect to strengthen our friendly relations with other powers, to protect fully our rights and interests, and to contribute to the consolidation of world peace."

JAPAN AND CHINA.

BARON TANAKA'S DECLARATION OF POLICY.

CHINESE SOVEREIGNTY OVER MANCHURIA.

Premier Tanaka, speaking in his capacity of Minister for Foreign Affairs, yesterday at the opening session of the Imperial Diet, on the foreign policy of Japan, emphasized the cordial relationship existing between Japan and foreign powers.

He spoke on Japan's policy toward China as follows:—

"Turning to the situation in China, it is highly gratifying for this Empire, which has always had at heart the welfare of the Chinese people, to note that strife and warfare which have been prevalent in China for more than fifteen long years are gradually subsiding and everything appears to point to peace. This Government are sincerely desirous that the Chinese nation, availing itself of this happy tendency in its affairs, may speedily be enabled to accomplish its great enterprise of peaceful unification. Deeply sympathizing as they do with Chinese people, this Government are willing, in co-operation with other nations having close relations with China, to lend them assistance as far as possible in their task of reconstruction. It need hardly be pointed out that the path of China both at home and abroad is beset with difficulties and the Chinese Government should more than ever be guided by counsels of self-restraint and moderation.

Manchuria—Japan's Interests Defined.

In speaking of our relationship with China, I feel bound to say a few words about our position in Manchuria as distinguished from the rest of China. In view of the political and strategic importance which it bears to Japan on account of its geographic contiguity with our territory, and considering the historic significance which it possesses, in that the region was restored to China by Japan at risk of her national existence from the aggressive grip of tsarist Russia, it is quite natural that the feeling of the Japanese people toward Manchuria should be peculiarly keen and entirely different from that toward any other part of China.

Furthermore, over a million Japanese subjects reside in that region to-day and Japan has many important rights and interests there. The interest and concern with which the Japanese people have come to regard the affairs of Manchuria should, therefore, not cause the least wonder.

Spirit Of Conciliation.

The Japanese Government has always followed this policy in all their dealings with Manchuria. In a word, the two nations, mutually understanding the position of the other, should be animated by a spirit of conciliation in their exchange of views and in their efforts for the settlement of various questions pending between them, so that a relationship may be restored between them that will not only contribute to their mutual well-being but be conducive to the tranquillity of the Far East and eventually to the progress of world civilization.

It goes without saying that the Japanese Government will respect the sovereignty of China over Manchuria and do all in their power to preserve the principles of the Open Door and equal opportunity, and desire that the region be made a safe abode for both natives and foreigners. They are, at the same time, fully determined to take appropriate steps when a state of affairs arises in Manchuria which shall place these things in jeopardy.

I hope that I have made the foreign policies of this Government sufficiently clear, and we hope that it will strengthen our friendly relations with other Powers, protect fully our rights and interests, and contribute to the consolidation of world peace."

Baron Tanaka on Relations With China

CHANG TSO-LIN'S DEATH

Japan Recovering From Last Financial Panic

Tokyo, Yesterday.

As anticipated, the speech of Baron Tanaka (the Premier), in his capacity as Foreign Minister, to the Diet, dealt mainly with the Japanese Government's policy towards China, but the keynote of the whole speech was the reiteration of the stand regarding "Manchuria as distinguished from the rest of China."

Cordial Relationship

At the opening session of the Imperial Diet, in his speech on the foreign policy of Japan, Baron Tanaka referred to the cordial relationship existing between Japan and foreign powers. He spoke on Japan's policy toward China as follows:

"Turning now to the situation in China it is highly gratifying for this Empire which always has at heart the welfare of the Chinese people to note that strife and warfare which have been prevalent in China for more than fifteen long years are gradually subsiding and everything appears to point to peace.

"This Government is sincerely desirous that the Chinese nation, availing itself of this happy tendency in its affairs, may speedily be enabled to accomplish its great enterprise of peaceful unification.

About Manchuria

"Deeply sympathizing as they do with the Chinese people, this Government is quite willing, in co-operation with other nations having close relations with China, to lend them assistance as far as possible in their task of construction. It need hardly be pointed out that, the path of China both at home and abroad being beset with difficulties, the Chinese Government, in order to attain its aims, should more than ever be guided by counsel of self-restraint and moderation.

"In speaking of our relationship with China, I feel bound to say a few words about our position in Manchuria as distinguished from the rest of China.

equal opportunity, and desire that that region be made a safe abode for both natives and foreigners.

"It is, at the same time, fully determined to take appropriate steps when a state of affairs arises in Manchuria which shall disturb and jeopardise.

"This Government has always followed this policy in all its dealings with Manchuria.

Tranquillity

"In a word, Japan's policy towards China is that two nations, mutually understanding the position of the other, should be animated by a spirit of conciliation in their exchange of views and in their efforts for the settlement of various questions pending between them, so that relationship may be restored between them, that will really not only contribute to their mutual well-being, but will be conducive to the tranquillity of the Far East and eventually to the progress of world civilisation.

Chang's Death

Tokyo, Yesterday.

A last minute attempt to prevent the question of the circumstances surrounding the death of Marshal Chang Tso-lin (whose train was bombed on his returning to Manchuria after a long absence) from becoming a party issue, was made this afternoon when the Premier privately conversed with Mr. Hamaguchi and Mr. Tokonami and requested them to refrain from bringing up the subject in the Diet, owing to the far-reaching international consequences that might arise out of the controversy.

Mr. Hamaguchi is reported to have replied that he is unable to tie himself down to a definite promise, while Mr. Tokonami is said to have stated that he did not intend to interpolate the Government on the affair.

Stabilise Exchange

In the Diet, the Finance Minister, Mr. Mitsuchi, observed that the economic situation of Japan was steadily recovering from the effects of the financial panic of April, 1927.

The re-adjustment of banks was making satisfactory progress. A hundred and twenty banks had been dissolved for the purpose of amalgamation in 1927, while 197 were dealt with likewise last year.

Mr. Mitsuchi concluded by saying that the Government was doing its best to stabilise exchange, for which purpose it wishes to raise the gold embargo as soon as possible.—Reuter.

The Daily Press

HONG KONG, JANUARY 21st, 1929.

ANGLO-JAPANESE RELATIONS.

THE forthcoming visit to Osaka of the British Ambassador to Japan is reported to have given rise to some interesting comment. It appears His Excellency has accepted an invitation to attend a banquet which is being given by Japanese business-men in Osaka, and this somewhat unusual event has led to renewed talk about closer Anglo-Japanese "co-operation." Another interesting item of news contained in the same cable is that there is a scheme to establish an Anglo-Japanese Society in Osaka, similar to the British Society in Tokyo, which has Japanese and British members. One of the leading newspapers in Japan—the Osaka Asahi—welcomes the news that the British Ambassador is to be the guest of honour at the Osaka business-men's banquet, and hopes that as a result friendly relations between Japan and Great Britain will be further cemented. The Asahi, however, warns its readers against the possibility of this desire for closer Anglo-Japanese co-operation being misinterpreted—obviously in China and the United States—as indicating a wish to enforce oppressive measures upon and against China. The Osaka paper, indeed, is bold enough to declare that in view of the liberal attitude which has been taken by Great Britain in its dealings with China, a re-casting of Japan's policy is an essential preliminary to closer Anglo-Japanese relations.

It will be remembered that some weeks ago there were rumours about an understanding between Great Britain and Japan. These reports varied in degree from a vague sort of entente to a definite revival of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, but there was no truth in any of the reports. Another alliance is obviously impossible, but there is in Japan a feeling that the present position of that country is one of isolation in regard to Chinese affairs, and the feeling is a decidedly uncomfortable one. Japan is not altogether satisfied by the assurance that although the letter of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance is dead, the spirit of that compact still lives. Reference to this matter was made recently by a member of the Japanese Embassy in London during a public lecture on Japan's position in the Far East. Mr. SABURI, the Chargé d'Affaires, described Manchuria as the key to the security of Japan and to the peace and stability of the Far East. As the keystone of the defensive policy of Japan, strategically and politically, Manchuria is of even greater importance to her than it is to China. This does not mean that Japan has territorial ambitions there, or has any intention of establishing a protectorate. She desires that the territory shall remain under Chinese sovereignty, but insist that peace and good order shall be preserved, so that both Chinese and foreigners, in strict conformity with the principle of the open door and of equal opportunity, may reside there in peace and prosecute their lawful occupations without interference or disturbance. Geographically and politically Japan occupies in the Far East a position similar to that of Great Britain in the West. Like Great Britain in the West, Japan is the strong stabilising element in the East. It naturally follows that the main purpose of Japan's policy in the Far East, like that of Great Britain in the West, is the maintenance of peace and the ordered progress of mankind, and her fixed determination to persist in that purpose has been made plain to all the world. Mr. SABURI concluded by saying that Japan believes that the spirit of peace which always animated the Anglo-Japanese Alliance should live on to animate and to render effective the wider understanding that replaced it as the guarantee of peace in the Far East.

Unfortunately, as the Osaka Asahi frankly admits, Japan's policy in and towards China has not been—and is not now—quite in line with the attitude taken by Great Britain. Two months ago Sir AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN told the House of Commons that the British and Japanese Governments had informally agreed to establish close contact between their respective Ministers in Peking, who would be thus able to inform their Governments of current developments in regard to various problems, "and be in a position to consider whether a common course of action would be desirable." If such co-operation were not desired, the frank exchange of views between the Ministers in Peking would enable them to understand and explain the reason for not deciding on common action. Sir AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN's statement put an end to the rumours of another Anglo-Japanese Alliance, and made it clear that nothing more than friendly co-operation was to be expected if and when a common course of action were desirable. But it is not on very many points that Britain and Japan can act together in China. Even when the avowed aims are identical, Great Britain is in a position to come to a decision and to take action more promptly than is Japan. This is not altogether the fault of the present TANAKA Ministry, which succeeded to a legacy of commitments reached by diplomacy and intrigue during a long period of years which will take much time and patience to disentangle.

Just what the policy of the TANAKA Government is nobody seems to know. Sometimes it appears that the Premier's military training predisposes him to favour the "firm hand" method; then suddenly he seems to favour a friendly policy of conciliation—to forgive and forget. Then, seemingly in despair at ever reaching any understanding by ordinary diplomatic means, he sends an unofficial envoy to China, Mr. TOKONAMI, an act which was strongly criticised last month by the Japanese Press. The fact was recalled that a former Premier, Count TERACHI (also a military man) once sent a man named NISHIHARA to China, and the notorious loans arranged by that gentleman are to-day the subject of bitter controversy between the Chinese and Japanese Governments. When Mr. TOKONAMI was in Nanking last month, he was entertained at a banquet by General CHIANG KAI SHEK, and in expressing thanks for his friendly reception the unofficial Japanese envoy made a significant remark. He said that in China, as in Japan at the Restoration, it was the young men who were doing the work of national reconstruction. "The Japanese statesmen now in office are mostly old men, and the difference in age is perhaps one of the causes of the frequent clashes of opinion that occur between your statesmen and ours. I feel that we must co-operate with you in trying to understand the sentiments of the younger people." To what extent Mr. TOKONAMI was expressing the views of Baron TANAKA only they themselves know, but Britain's attitude towards China certainly shows sympathy for the sentiments of those "younger people" whom the unofficial Japanese envoy praised at Nanking. If the policy of the Tokyo Government is framed on similar lines, Anglo-Japanese co-operation will be not only possible but easy, nor need it raise apprehension either in Nanking or Washington. The close contact referred to by Sir AUSTEN CHAMBERLAIN should have many favourable reactions. It should allay Japanese fears of isolation, and of Anglo-American opposition to Japan's legitimate claims. It should provide means for avoiding friction arising from commercial rivalries; it should afford opportunity to warn Japan quietly but earnestly of the consequences of a policy which persists either in ignoring or irritating those "young men" in Nanking whom Mr. TOKONAMI so warmly admires. After many delays, it seems that Sino-Japanese relations have improved to a degree which warrants the hope of a complete understanding being reached very shortly. The Japanese Minister to China has returned to Shanghai, and will be in Nanking before the British Ambassador in Tokyo takes his seat with the Osaka business-men at their banquet next Friday. It may be that the Ambassador will then have occasion to congratulate his hosts upon Japan having taken a step which will make Anglo-Japanese co-operation in China not only possible but desirable.
