because of the mistaken belief that religion was dying out of itself has coincided exactly with the coming into effect of the new Soviet Constitution on Dec. 5, 1936, containing a guarantee of freedom of religious worship.

Incessant propaganda among adults and youths is only one of the weapons that Soviet authorities have employed in the last two years against religion. Such veteran atheists as Emil Yaroslavsky have from time to time warned that the war on religion must be carried on by legal means, rather than by force, and the authorities have sternly forbidden the riotous raids of churches that characterized earlier periods.

"Liquidation" of Churchmen

But within the framework of legality severe measures have been taken against churches and active religionists, which it is hardly necessary to recount here since this writer has already reported them as they occurred. It is sufficient to say that they have included the "liquidation" of many church functionaries of high and low degree on charges of Trotskyist-Fascist espionage, sabotage and serving as tools of foreign intelligence systems.

Church properties are protected by law against summary closure, but the law is so loose and the power of the authorities so great that legal reasons can be found for closing or destroying any church edifice. Just now the Borogomilovsky Cathedral,

WAR ON RELIGION REVIVED IN RUSSIA

Incessant Propaganda is Now
Carried on Under the Terms of the New Constitution

A Fundamental Conflict

By Harold Lenny

Wireless to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, Oct. 29. -- The exhortation to Soviet school teachers this week to carry on active anti-religious training among children is part of a general campaign directed against all religions -- Catholic, Greek Orthodox, Protestant, Jewish and Mohammedan -- which has been especially pronounced in the last two years.

Curiously enough, this intensified drive after a period during which Soviet leaders relaxed their anti-religious work

Furthermore, however much truth there may have been in the charges that churchmen were engaged in treasonable activities, it is an historical fact that they were the leading factor in the initial opposition to bolshevism, and it must be true today that they contain a large proportion of disaffected elements.

Hence it is hardly to be wondered at that the Kremlin regards them with deep distrust.

which only last Easter eve this correspondent saw jammed to the doors, with a pious crowd standing in a cold rain outside, is being demolished.

There are several reasons for the hostility of the Soviet regime to all religions.

First, religion runs squarely against the Marxist-materialistic philosophy. Karl Marx considered religion "opium for the people" and that phrase was adopted by Lenin and later by Joseph Stalin.

Science Respected

To the communist mind, religion is the negation of science, to which the Communists look to rebuild the world according to their plan. Communists also regard religion as the tool of rulers and exploiters in keeping the ignorant masses in subjection since time immemorial. Religion -- that religion which depends on an infinite God -- preaches the acceptance of today's hardships and injustices in return for paradise. Communism, on the other hand, contends that man can build his paradise on earth.

There are very practical reasons why Communists are impatient for the final extinction of religion. The Soviet State does not find it expedient to permit the existence of any organizations or societies that are not in some way dependent on it and subject to its control. The church is not an organ of the Soviet State and is therefore repugnant to it.
